In this course, we examine the ethical and political ideals underlying the rule of law, and controversies concerning what the law should be, in a liberal-democratic society. What is value of individual liberty and what justifies the legal restriction placed on individual liberty? Does our ideal of equality justify or reject affirmative action, and the pursuit of diversity in key institutions? Does equality allow the recognition of certain special cultural group rights to protect ethnic and national minorities’ ways of life (e.g. native American tribes)? What is the basis for the state’s right to punish law-breakers? How do we determine just punishment and is the death penalty for certain crimes morally right? These issues are examined by discussing opposing philosophical points of view and key legal decisions.

ACADEMIC INTEGRITY

UCSD has a university-wide Policy on Integrity of Scholarship, published annually in the, online at http://registrar.ucsd.edu/records/grdbk3.html. All students must read and be familiar with this Policy. Receipt of this syllabus constitutes an acknowledgment that you are responsible for understanding and acting in accordance with UCSD guidelines on academic integrity.

Academic stealing refers to the theft of exams or exam answers, of papers or take-home exams composed by others, and of research notes, computer files, or data collected by others. Academic cheating, collusion, and fraud refer to having others do your schoolwork or allowing them to present your work as their own; using unauthorized materials during exams; inventing data or bibliography to support a paper, project, or exam; purchasing tests, answers, or papers from any source whatsoever; submitting (nearly) identical papers to two classes. Plagiarism refers to the use of another’s work without full acknowledgment, whether by suppressing the reference, neglecting to identify direct quotations, paraphrasing closely or at length without citing sources, spuriously identifying quotations or data, or cutting and pasting the work of several (usually unidentified) authors into a single undifferentiated whole.

PLAGIARISM POLICY

All papers will be written entirely in the student’s own words and no paragraph, sentence or sentence fragment will come from our text or any other sources. Plagiarism will not be tolerated. PAPERS WILL BE SUBMITTED TO TURNOITIN.COM TO ENSURE FAIRNESS AND HONESTY. Your paper will include no direct quotations but must include citations indicating where the idea being discussed is located in our text. There will be 10-15 citations per paper. The paper must be based on the class readings. Any plagiarism or academic dishonesty on any paper or exam will result in an ‘F’ for the whole course and is reported to the UCSD Academic Integrity Office.

TURNITIN.COM

All papers must be submitted to turnitin.com through the link provided on the course Ted/WebCT. After you have uploaded your paper a confirmation page will appear. Print out the confirmation page for your records in case your electronic submission is disputed.
