The Eric Paul Allison Memorial Prize Fellowship is a scholarship made possible by Emeritus UC San Diego Professor Henry Allison in support of an undergraduate UCSD Philosophy Major going on to graduate school.

Aaron Chipp-Miller

Aaron just completed a B.A. in Philosophy, and in the fall he will begin the PH.D. program at UC San Diego’s Department of Philosophy.

His primary interests are in applied ethics and political philosophy. Specifically, he is interested in what the moral status of nonhuman animals says about our moral obligations to them, and what the most well off humans owe to the least well off. He is also interested in workplace relationships and democratic workplace organization.

Aaron plans to learn as much as possible in graduate school and to take full advantage of the vast amounts of knowledge and experience available to him through the faculty at UC San Diego, and pursue a career in academia as a professional philosopher.

From Aaron:
“I am extremely grateful for this award and want to thank the Eric Paul Allison Memorial Fellowship for this generous gift, it makes a huge difference for me and my family!”

Congratulations Aaron!
